TEACHERS ENJOY GOOD LECTURES

for its cultural as well as its practical value. The child sees a means to an end in this study. Reasoning is developed as well as skill conception of number must be first, then accuracy and rapidity.

Musie—Orchestra.

E. E. Ledy, of the O. T. R. C., Secretary, requested the teachers to call for their reading circle diplomas at the meeting.

The audience then listened to an excellent address by Miss Anna E. Logan, of Oxford, O. Education is living. It is making the child socially efficient. Does the teacher know what it is in the home? If not, how can the work of home and school be combined?

The business man who is successful knows his stock in trade. As the teacher faces his work he finds all factors confronting him. What is his stock in trade?

The critics of today say the schools are not producing the desired results, and yet we find many children who are ready to scale the highest mountains, others who wish to be lifted over a mole hill. Have the teachers helped too much? We hear not as much encouragement as we should.

Still first grade pupils of today read better than more books than the third grade pupils of years ago. Is it worth while? Is the child getting his value or benefit? Why do so many drop out of the grades?

If teachers are to do the right kind of work, something more than mere knowledge of material is needed, the knowledge of the child's life, the child's daily life. Let them tell and ask questions concerning the things that are of interest to them. We can then make our reading courses worth while.

Teach local history? Does it mean anything to children? Try it. Let children keep diaries of things worth while. Let them decide which event of the day is most important. What we want in the school must come from the home. Close connection helps the teacher to know why some children are lagging. Retardation is often caused by some physical trouble. School and community must work together. Domestic Science offers splendid opportunities to girls. Teachers who are near the boys and girls must have knowledge of the subject, know how to organize the material, then, knowing the child, develop the child.

Musie—Orchestra.

AFTERNOON SESSION.

Opened with two excellent selections by the orchestra, followed by "Language Work in the Grades," by Miss Logan.

The greatest thing in life is to find that which is needed daily. If we do we have language lessons. The dictionary gives a good definition of language, but does the teacher know what he is after? What shall the impression be? Shall we change the language
